Welcome to the third issue of our monthly Newsletter!

Our mission is to train a new generation of leaders in Sustainable Leadership & Diplomacy, to give managers the tools to have a vision, foresight, leadership, navigate the complex geopolitical situation, all the while investing in R & D, technology and human capital and imagining and living in a sustainable inclusive city.

The Place du Trocadéro has a rich history, but one event stands out : the Universal Exhibition in 1878 and the Palais du Trocadéro designed by architects Gabriel Davioud and Jules Bourdais , which was inaugurated by French President Patrice MacMahon. The palace later transitioned to become the largest concert hall in Paris with a capacity of 4,600 seats , where Charles Lemeire painted a huge mural entitled "La France sous les traits de l'Harmonie accueille les Nations"

Inspired by these major events, and in the spirit of harmony and world peace, our school welcomes all nations and all peoples to join our mission of sustainability, understanding , dialogue and diplomacy .

OPEN HOUSE , MARCH 7, 2026

Written by the Academic Committee

We are pleased to announce that the Trocadéro Forum Institute has chosen to open its doors at the Campus Sud des Métiers at 13, Avenue Simone Veil in Nice, France.

After having visited several properties since October, the President has decided to open our school at this location in Nice .

We are pleased to bring together a renowned group of permanent and guest professors to our school, who bring with them their rich expertise and regional perspectives

Visiting the campus just before the Christmas holidays, Ellen Wasylina has made the decision to open our school there.

Here is the website : <https://www.campussuddesmetiers.com/le-campus/>

The Chambre de Commerce et Industrie (CCI) of Nice and its financial partners want to give young people the possibility to acquire a trade via an apprenticeship program with their 15 apprenticeship programs .

Stretching over 24,000 m2, the campus is powered by geothermal and solar panels , which powers the Meridia eco-quartier .

The City of Nice made the decision to heat, to cool, and provide hot sanitary water to this eco-quartier , and its 550,000m2 of buildings, , which includes 3,500m2 of housing, and 250,000m2 of tertiary buildings, thus avoiding 5,000 tons of CO2 per year .

So, come by and see us and learn more about the Vision and the Mission of our two year Masters of Arts program in Sustainable Leadership & Diplomacy on March 7 .

SPOTLIGHT ON OUR OFFICIAL PARTNER

Written by the Partnership Advisor

In February 2025, Ellen Wasylina, as President and Founder of the Trocadéro Forum Institute, signed a Memorandum of Understanding with Jorge Chaminé, President and Founder of the Centre Européen de Musique.

Jorge Chaminé has accepted to serve as patron of the first cohort of students in the Master of Arts (MA) in Sustainable Leadership & Diplomacy.

Below is a short conversation between Ellen and Jorge, discussing why and how they will cooperate in 2026/27.

Ellen : Jorge, it's great to see that we finally found a great way to partner together !

Jorge : Indeed. This partnership reflects a shared conviction that education today must go beyond technical knowledge alone. Leadership and diplomacy require the ability to listen, to understand complexity, and to create dialogue across differences. Music naturally embodies these qualities. In an ensemble, balance is achieved not through dominance but through attentive listening and mutual awareness. This is why music and diplomacy are so closely connected: both seek harmony without erasing diversity. Through this collaboration, we hope to demonstrate that music is not an accessory to culture, but a living tool for understanding, coexistence, and responsible leadership.

Ellen : As you know, Music is very close to my heart , having trained as a classical musician as a young girl, I really wanted to integrate it into our Masters of Arts program .

Jorge : I believe very strongly that Music is not merely an addition to education, but a necessity. Music accompanies every civilisation because it responds to a fundamental human need: the need to give meaning to emotion and structure to silence.

In a world where communication is often immediate but rarely attentive, music teaches patience, presence, and nuance. These qualities are essential for future diplomats and leaders. Learning to listen to music also means learning to listen to others, to complexity, and to what is not immediately expressed.

Ellen : And we will both welcome our first cohort together when we open the doors for the very first time of the Trocadéro Forum Institute in Nice on September 7, 2026.

Jorge : I am very much looking forward to that moment. What interests me most in this initiative is the way music can move beyond being an academic subject to becoming a lived experience within the programme. When students encounter music directly — through listening, practice, and shared artistic experience — it transforms their perception of responsibility, dialogue, and collective decision-making. This experiential dimension is essential if music is to contribute meaningfully to education in diplomacy and leadership.

Ellen : Tell us about the program you have prepared for this two-year Masters program, which will feature 30 hours per semester of Music and Diplomacy .

Jorge : The courses we have designed to begin with an immersion experience at the Opera and a masterclass, allowing students to encounter music as a living act before approaching it conceptually. Each semester then develops themes such as the history of cultural diplomacy, international cultural law, active listening, vocal and instrumental practice, music and memory, interreligious dialogue, European cultural construction, and finally the relationship between music, oceans, and ecology. The intention is to move progressively from experience to reflection, showing how music shapes identity, dialogue, and our relationship with the world, in line with the broader vision of the Centre Européen de Musique.

NICE CULINARY SPECIALITIES

Written by the Culinary editor

Coming to Nice will not only be an academic experience, but a culinary one .

Food is the best way to get to know people, how they eat, what they like, what fruits and vegetables they use in their daily meals .

Looking back on the Holiday season, my neighbors invited me into their home for l'apertif. Our host served a table full of local specialities , notably La Pissaladière which can be called the pizza niçoise .

Here is the recipe in French, which is too long to copy here .

There are two parts to this recipe : Making the bread dough où la pate à pain and the confit d'onion , made of lots of onions and the pissalat, which is a mixture of sardines, anchovies and olive oil and black olives, which also serve as decoration.

in the upcoming issues, we will also introduce some wines of the Provence region .

Recommendation : a chilled Provence white, rosé or red .
